
God is love.
Love is love. Do you have to put God into it?

That is the beginning and ending of everything.

God is love should lead you to love is love unless you believe that everything is a way of realizing that where it all began is where it should end, that all you have experienced is human mistakes. To break the circle of human mistakes you should look beyond it and not accept that the beginning always must be the same as the ending starting all over again. Love is love is when you have broken the circle of senseless repetition. Love is love is awareness of unawareness.

By God is love I mean that the ending is different from the beginning by including that same realization. Otherwise, there wouldn't have been any movement from one point to another, there would have been dead silence and no life, it is just a way of expression to make it simple.

In other words: love is love completes the circle that otherwise wouldn't exist.

Yes.
Human experiences and mistakes complete the love of God.

Yes. God is love.
Love is love.
